The secretary of state, in Mr. Holman admitted that that was true, Maxey's opinion, was the proper person to be selected for the performance of the presidential functions in case of the death of both president and vice-president. His polities would naturally be in accord with that of the majority of the people.

Mr. Holman admitted that that was true, but called attention to the fact that when it was proposed to increase a great body of salaries the proposition was ruled in order and legislation had been framed which had been condemned by the whole country. He went on to argue that the Holman endorsement, instead of having been an evil, as had been contended by its enemies, it had said to tunited States died before the meeting of this congress. Mr. Beck suggestively inquired what might have happened had the president of the United States died before the meeting of this congress. He passed on to the question which he considered only of secondary importance, of whether the approach of the bodies of the family thought to have been in the house at the time of the first business. ple had placed the executive authority for a few years in the hands of the Democratic party. The Republicans by themselves could not have sworn the senators from Illinois, New Hampshire, or Oregon. Mr. Edmunds expressed his surprise at Mr.
Beck's observations. He admitted that it had been the will of the party of which Mr.
Beck was a distinguished leader, to resort to great ways and means committee, were sub-ordinated to the appropriation committee, and, for instance, the committee on judiciary, formerly so powerful, was to-day but a humble grave in which was volutionary methods. It was within the power of a large minority of any government to become revolutionists and attempt to break up, but Mr. Edmunds should hope it would be a very long time before any Democratic or any Republican senators of the representatives who were in the minority man of the committee on appropriations he held back the appropriation bills in order to d, whatever of action of inaction, presence r absence, with the view to gain the political advantage of dispensing postoffices, gning land warrants, until the ection of a new president. and had exercised that power, but his (Mr. Wilburn) opinion was that this power, how-eyer wisely, however fairly exercised, was a power which no man and no set of men should exercise on this floor. The house thought purely imaginary. He had no should exercise on this floor. The house doubt that when Vice-President Arthur had been told that great inconvenience and failed to leave the chair the senate could evil would follow from a distribution of the failed to leave the chair the senate could have elected a president pro tempore to service whenever the vice-president should be absent, and could have done similarly last spring. If Mr. Edmunds had the regulation of the question under discussion he would leave the substance of the law where it was now, but would add to it a provision requiring the house of representatives to meet and organize on the 4th of March, that the country should have four lives between the executive office and chaos. That would meet that the power should be centralized even if it was asked in the interest of unity and harmony. Other men might vote to continue the power of the appropriation computes a new election could be had. This plan Mr. Edmunds advocated because it was based on the solid principle years, before a new election could be had. This plan Mr. Edmunds advocated because it was based on the solid principle that it was the intention and the necessary scheme of a government of the people, that when a vacancy occurs in the office of the chief magistrate the representatives of the people in the senate and the house of representatives should be the guardians of that high office till the voice of the people could be again directly taken by an election, and that it was not in accordance with the true philosophy of republican and democratic Sax Francisco, Dec. 16.—The most sensational and startling plot for the wholesale assassination of some of the most prominent men in this city, came to light here last night. Some time ago the police obtained information of the existence of an organization called the "Socialistic Revolutionary Association," composed of ultra socialistic members. Close watch was kept on their movements, and the police finally succeeded in obtaining the minutes of one of their meetings, held November 23. From these it was discovered that it was the intention of the association to put out of the way about twenty men, including W. T. Coleman, Congressman W. W. Morrow, General Barnes, Major Bartlett, United States Judge Lorenzo Sawyer, Leland Sandford, Charles Crocker. Governor Stoneman, the principal police officials, and several others. These names were placed on the "prospective list," and piaced in the hands of the executive committee, to carry out the orders of the association.

The committee were to derise the best mode of accomplishing the ends of the plot, and were thus engaged when their work was brought to a sudden termination last night by the discovery of the association's headquarters by the police, and the arrest of four men found in the room, named Julius C. Kosher, Henry Weisman, Charles Mittellistad and Oscar Eggers. In the room was also found a complete labratory for the manufacture of infernal machines. Koecher, another of the band, known as Kowalski, is a Prussisn, driven from that country owing to the persecutions of his people by the Russian government, identified himself with the anti-Cooley league on coming to this city. The house in which the dynamite was found is occupied by him. The prisoners bave been charged with mist demeanor for unlawfully storing giant powder. The severest penalty is six months imprisonment and $1,000 fine.

Many of the most prominent citizens have been seen to-day concerning the dynamite plot discovered last night. Most of them view it in a serious light. Mayor Bartlett says: "Some days ago Chief of Police Cromley informed me of the existence ttorney at Law. Office over
